Annotation: family and intergenerational relations are very important from an ethnological and ethnosocial point of view. This analysis of the Genesis and historical progress of relationships helps to understand how it influenced the cultural paradigm of society. A look at the ethnogenesis of the Uzbek people and the history of its development makes it possible to identify the structural elements of family relations in society and intergenerational interactions. Through this analysis, it is possible to determine the relationship between changes in family and social dynamics, socio-economic development and cultural development of the nation.

The processes of globalization and modernization of the world occur on the basis of a number of factors of the development of the state and society. In this process, the issue of women, their participation in socio-political relations, the fact that their rights and freedoms are practically ensured – is considered an important index of the development of states and democracy. In families, conditions are being created for the protection of women's rights, their worthy contribution to the prosperity of society, their appreciation of Labor. Special attention is paid to the fact that women are socially active not only in the family, but also in society. At the moment, there is also a growing tendency to discriminate against women, violence, religious prejudice in families. From this point of view, it is of urgent importance to achieve family stability, to create new mechanisms for ensuring the proportionality of traditional and modernity in them. The harmony of traditional and modern values and intergenerational succession in the families of the rejuvenated Uzbekistan is manifested in the upbringing of young people in the spirit of reverence for the elderly and devotion to national traditions, customs. In order to follow gender equality in the family, special attention is paid to increasing the social activity of women, increasing the responsibility of parents to the upbringing of children, social protection of low-income families. In particular, preferential loans and houses are allocated to families under the age of 30, a "young family" school, a "bridal Institute" are being established in the neighborhoods. Reconciliation commissions for the elimination of family conflicts and divorces are in operation. In Uzbekistan, it is important that family members follow moral standards such as love, mutual respect, patience, understanding, form a sense of belonging to reforms in the management of the state and society, and each family member matures as a person.

The system of financial support for women, including a system aimed at improving the economic status of women and their socio-economic activities, is important for the sustainable development of society in many countries around the world. Such systems are usually based on the principles of social justice and equality, aimed at ensuring women's economic independence, directing them to social work and education, as well as helping and supporting them at the same time.

In the theoretical framework of the system of financial support for women, the system of financial support for social justice and equality provides for the provision of social justice for women. It aims to establish economic and social equality between women and men. As they are familiar, in many societies women do not have moderate economic and social importance, so they should be supported.

In economic independence, a system of financial support for women helps to ensure their economic independence. This will help women be able to change their financial prospects, regardless of their family or personal circumstances.

Financial education programs for women in financial education and skills, improving their economic viability and giving them financial direct skills is also an important aspect. This system is intended to explain to women the knowledge of Family Budget Management, Debt use, investment and maintenance.

The system of financial support for women in the fight against pre-finance discrimination helps to combat financial discrimination against women. Nowadays, many countries are taking measures to perfect financial services and lending system for women or opportunities to join other financial resources.

In Social Security, governments attach importance to the development of women's Social Security and benefit systems. This is especially necessary for women who suffer from unemployment, moral or physical discrimination.

The system of financial support for women in expanding employment opportunities is aimed at expanding employment opportunities for women and assessing their wages. For example, in some countries there are developed mechanisms aimed at losing the wage gap between women and men.

The system of financial support for women in the allocation of funds and grants is often carried out in the form of separate financial funds and grants for women. These grants provide funds for women to venture, start their own business, or engage in social activities.

In health and psychological support, the financial support system can not only be limited to financial matters, but also to women's health, and psychological support services. It helps to improve the physical and spiritual condition of women.

So, what Genesis do family and intergenerational relations have from an ethnological and ethnosocial point of view? What made them a historical cultural paradigm? These questions encourage us to look at the ethnogenesis of the Uzbek people, to retrospectively analyze existing scientific and practical experiments.

Conclusion: The system of financial support for women contributes to the social activities of women by ensuring social justice, equality, economic independence and financial education in society. This system shows that family and intergenerational relations in society are closely related to historical and cultural processes. Looking at the ethnogenesis of the Uzbek people, the financial support of women is an important factor for social stability and development today.
